O R D E R

Chester Brost has filed a notice of appeal from the denial of his petition under 28 U.S.C. § 2254, which we construe as an application for a certificate of appealability. This court has reviewed the final order of the district court and the record on appeal. We find no substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right. See 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(2).

Accordingly, the request for a certificate of appealability is DENIED.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Petitioner Chester Brost, represented by counsel, has filed this petition for writ of habeas corpus challenging his conviction by the Circuit Court of Cook County of robbery, aggravated kidnapping and three counts of aggravated criminal sexual assault, for which he was sentenced to a total of 105 years' imprisonment. For the following reasons, the court finds the petition barred by 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d). The court will therefore neither address the merits of the petition nor order a response.[2]

STATE COURT PROCEEDINGS

Brost was convicted on January 4, 1995. The Illinois Appellate Court affirmed Brost's convictions on March 1, 1996, and the Illinois Supreme Court denied leave to appeal on June 4, 1996. In 1996, the Illinois Post-Conviction Act set the limitation period for filing a post-conviction petition as follows: [p. 2]

> No proceedings under this Article shall be commenced more than 6 months after the denial of a petition for leave to appeal or the date for filing such a petition if none is filed or

[2] Rule 4 of the Rules Governing Section 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts requires the court to conduct an initial review of habeas corpus petitions. The Court may summarily dismiss a petition without examining the state court record or ordering a response if it plainly appears from the face of the petition and its exhibits that the petitioner is not entitled to relief. Small v. Endicott, 998 F.2d 411, 414 (7th Cir. 1993).

> more than 45 days after the defendant files his or her brief in the appeal of the sentence before the Illinois Supreme Court (or more than 45 days after the deadline for the filing of the defendant's brief with the Illinois Supreme Court if not brief is filed) or 3 years from the date of conviction, whichever is sooner, unless the petitioner alleges facts showing that the delay was not due to his or her culpable negligence.

725 ILCS 5/122-1(c). Unless he could show a lack of "culpable negligence," Brost had to file any post-conviction petition on or before December 4, 1996, six months after the Illinois Supreme Court denied leave to appeal.

On November 4, 1996 Brost mailed a document captioned "Motion To Toll Post-Conviction Limitation Statute And For Appointment Of Counsel." Exhs. at A-2-6.[3] The motion explained that Stateville had been "on lock-down status," making it nearly impossible for him to use the law library. He stated that he doubted that he could file a post-conviction petition on time, and asked that the time limit for filing a petition be tolled. He also asked that counsel be appointed to assist him. The motion, prepared with the assistance of another inmate, did not mention any claim Brost intended to raise.

On January 8, 1997, after the limitations period had run, Judge Thomas A. Hett of the Circuit Court of Cook County denied the motion to toll the limitations period, stating, "there is no statute that allows the Court -- to allow the Court to total [sic] requirements in this case." Exhs. at D-1-4. Nevertheless, on February 20, 1997, Brost filed a post-conviction petition with exhibits. Exhs. B-1-159. On April 23, 1997, Judge Hett denied the petition as untimely, finding that inmates at Stateville were given access to legal services and materials, and that Brost's late filing was not excused by a lack of culpable negligence. Exhs. E-1-5. Brost filed a motion for reconsideration, which Judge Hett denied without comment on June 11, 1997. Exhs. F-1-2. Brost filed a notice of appeal July 2, 1997. Exhs. C-24.

Counsel was appointed for Brost in the appeal of the denial of his post-conviction petition, but Brost asserts that his counsel's presentation was ineffective. Brost hired private counsel, but [p. 3] the Illinois Appellate Court denied his new attorney permission to file a supplemental brief six days past the due date. Brost's new counsel attacked the refusal as abusive, but the Appellate Court did not reconsider, nor did the Illinois Supreme Court grant a writ of mandamus compelling the Appellate Court to accept the late brief. Exhs. I, J, K, L. The Illinois Appellate Court rejected Brost's appeal, and the Illinois Supreme Court denied leave to appeal December 1, 1999, Exhs. N, and the United States Supreme Court denied certiorari April 17, 2000.

TIMELINESS

In 1996 Congress imposed a one-year limitation period for petitions for habeas corpus challenging state criminal convictions. The one-year period normally begins on "the date on which the judgment became final by the conclusion of direct review of the expiration of the time for seeking such review." 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(A). Here that date was September 3, 1996, when the 90-day period for seeking certiorari from the United States Supreme Court expired. The one-year limitations period is interrupted during the time "a properly filed application for State post-conviction or other collateral review with respect to the pertinent judgment or claim is pending." 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(2). But "properly filed" is critical; a petition that is untimely under state law is not "properly filed" and does not stop the clock. Artuz v. Bennett, --- U.S. ----, 121 S.Ct. 361, 364 & n. 2, 148 L.Ed.2d 213 (Nov. 7, 2000); Freeman v. Page, 208 F.3d 572 (7th Cir. 2000).

The Circuit Court of Cook County denied Brost's post-conviction as untimely, and that holding was affirmed on appeal. However mistaken or unfair it may appear, that determination is binding on this court. The Seventh Circuit has held that "whether a petition is 'properly filed' depends on state law, so that if a state court accepts and entertains it on the merits it has been 'properly filed' but that if the state court rejects it as procedurally irregular it has not been 'properly filed.'" Fernandez v. Sternes, 227 F.3d 977, 978 (7th Cir. 2000) (citing Freeman).

The facts of Freeman closely resemble this case.

The plaintiff had filed his post-conviction petition late, but claimed this was not due to culpable negligence because Stateville Correctional Center "was on lock-down for a substantial period of time prior to and after July 1, 1995," the date [p. 4] a shortened limitations period for post-conviction relief went into effect. Freeman, 208 F.3d at 575. The Illinois courts found this excuse did not negate "culpable negligence," and the Court of Appeals held that this was a determination of state law binding on federal courts. Id. at 576. Since Brost's untimely post-conviction petition did not toll the running of the limitations period, it expired September 3, 1997, more than three years before this petition was filed.

Even if Brost's post-conviction petition had tolled the limitations period, his habeas petition would be untimely. Between September 3, 1996, when the period began to run, and February 20, 1997, when the petition was filed, 240 days elapsed. After the Illinois Supreme Court denied leave to appeal on December 1, 1999, the petition was no longer "pending" and the clock would have begun to run again, to run out on or about April 6, 2000.[4] And even if it were considered

[4] The date is "on or about" because the court is uncertain whether a period of a year ending in a leap year should be counted as 365 or 366 days. The Seventh Circuit has not yet decided whether a pending petition for certiorari is "a properly filed application for State post-conviction or other collateral review" that tolls the limitations period. Gutierrez v. Schomig,

"pending" until the United States Supreme Court denied certiorari on April 17, 2000, this petition would still be late; counting the 240 days that had passed before the post-conviction petition was filed, Brost's time would have expired on or about August 20, 2000.[5] Brost's counsel filed this petition on April 16, 2001, apparently believing he had a year following the U.S. Supreme Court's denial of his petition for certiorari.

233 F.3d 490, 491 (7th Cir. 2000). Other circuits have uniformly held it is not. See Bunney v. Mitchell, 241 F.3d 1151, 1156 (9th Cir. 2001); Isham v. Randle, 226 F.3d 691, 695 (6th Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 121 S.Ct. 1211 (2001); Coates v. Byrd, 211 F.3d 1225, 1227 (11th Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 121 S.Ct. 1298, 148 L.Ed.2d 995 (2001); Ott v. Johnson, 192 F.3d 510, 513 (5th Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1099 (2000); Rhine v. Boone, 182 F.3d 1153, 1155 (10th Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1084 (2000). This court believes the Seventh Circuit would agree that seeking certiorari by the United Sates Supreme Court is not a form of "State . . . review."

[5] Brost filed a second post-conviction petition on September 19, 2000, that was deemed timely filed because based on a claim that the statute under which he was sentenced was unconstitutional. See Exhs. P. By then the federal limitations period had run under any computation.

APPRENDI CLAIM

Brost's counsel also throws in -- a kinder expression is unwarranted -- a claim under Apprendi v. New Jersey, ---- U.S. ----, 120 S.Ct. 2348, 147 L.Ed.2d 435 (2000). Apprendi held that any fact other than a prior conviction that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the [p. 5] prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to the jury and proved beyond a reasonable doubt. It appears Brost's argument is that under 730 ILCS 5/5-8-4(a) consecutive sentences for the three aggravated sexual assaults would have been mandated only if they had been found to have been "committed as part of a single course of conduct during which there was no substantial change in the nature of the criminal objective," and that the jury, rather than the sentencing judge, should have determined that these facts existed.

Different panels of the Illinois Appellate Court have disagreed on whether the holding of Apprendi reaches a determination that sentences shall be served consecutively where the individual sentences are not enhanced. See People v. Lucas, 2001 WL 286422 (Ill App. 1st Dist., March 21, 2001) (summarizing conflicting opinions). There is also disagreement as to whether Apprendi claims are cognizable on collateral review. See People v. Jones, 2001 WL 314750 (Ill. App. 1st Dist., March 30, 2001). These questions await resolution by the Illinois Supreme Court, and perhaps the United States Supreme Court, and will determine the ultimate fate of Brost's second post-conviction petition.

Nevertheless, in this court Brost's Apprendi claim is dead in the water. Not only could this court grant no relief because it has manifestly not been appealed to the highest Illinois court. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(b)(1); O'Sullivan v. Boerckel, 526 U.S. 838 (1999). It is also barred by the one-year limitations period of 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d). The statute provides that the limitations period for a habeas claim asserting a new constitutional right recognized by the Supreme Court begins to run on "the date on which the constitutional right asserted was initially recognized by the Supreme Court, if the right has been newly recognized by the Supreme Court and made retroactively applicable to cases on collateral review." 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(C). The Supreme Court has not declared Apprendi applicable to cases on collateral review. The Seventh Circuit has made clear that until it does, lower courts may not jump the gun and find that retroactivity is implied. Talbott v. Indiana, 226 F.3d 866 (7th Cir. 2000). Until then, Brost's Apprendi claim, like his other claims, is barred by 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d). The petition for writ of habeas corpus is accordingly dismissed.

[p. 6] This dismissal may not be appealed unless this court or the Court of Appeals issues a certificate of appealability. 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(1). If Brost seeks a certificate of appealability from this court, Brost should explain why "reasonable jurists could debate whether (or, for that matter, agree that) the petition should have been resolved in a different manner or that the issues presented were adequate to deserve encouragement to proceed further.'" Slack v. McDaniel, 529 U.S. 473, 483-84 (2000) (quoting Barefoot v. Estelle, 463 U.S. 880, 893 (1983).

[Reverse side of Minute Order]

On January 4, 1995, Petitioner, Chester Brost, was convicted in the Circuit Court of Cook County on a charge of aggravated kidnaping, several counts of aggravate criminal sexual assault, and was sentenced to 105 years incarceration. Brost filed a direct appeal, and his conviction was affirmed on March 1, 1996.

Brost sought leave to appeal in the Illinois Supreme Court. On June 4, 1996, the Illinois Supreme Court denied Brost leave to appeal.

On January 8, 1997, Brost filed a post-conviction petition under Illinois law. But, under the applicable Illinois law, any post-conviction petition had to be filed by December 4, 1996, six months after the Illinois Supreme Court declined to hear his direct appeal. The Circuit Court of Cook County summarily dismissed Brost's post-conviction petition as untimely because the petition was late, and Brost failed to demonstrate a lack of culpable negligence. Brost unsuccessfully appealed the denial of his post-conviction petition. The record demonstrates that his appellate briefs were also untimely, and neither the Illinois Appellate Court nor the Illinois Supreme Court ruled on the merits of Brost's post-conviction petition.

On April 16, 2001, Brost filed a petition for writ of habeas corpus in this court alleging an Apprendi issue and a farrago of other unsupported claims. On May 18, 2001, the court dismissed Brost's habeas petition as untimely under 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d). On June 1, 2001, Brost filed the instant motion for reconsideration, or in the alternative, for a certificate of appealability.

As to the motion for reconsideration, Brost fails to cite the rule of civil procedure under which he is proceeding, but this type of motion must be under either Rule 59(e), or one of the subsections of 60(b). Liberally construing Brost's motion, the court will consider both Rules 59(e) and 60(b)(1).

Both Rules allow the court to reconsider previous rulings, although the standards are more liberal under 59(e). That said however, relief under Rule 59(e) is rarely granted, and is justified only when there is "newly discovered evidence, an intervening change in the controlling law, [or] manifest error of law." A Rule 60(b)(1) motion should be granted only in exceptional circumstances, and only when there is a mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect. Fed.R. Civ.P. 60(b)(1); see Lee v. Village of River Forest, 936 F.2d 976, 979 (7th Cir. 1991); Jones v. Lincoln Elec. Co., 188 F.3d 709, 732 (7th Cir. 1999); Cincinnati Ins. Co. v. Flanders Elec. Motor Serv., 131 F.3d 625, 628 (7th Cir. 1997); United States v. 8136 Dobson Street, 125 F.3d 1076, 1082 (7th Cir. 1997). Neither Rule is appropriate to advance argument or theories that "could and should have been made before the district court rendered a judgment. . . or to present evidence that was available earlier." See e.g. LB Credit Corp. v. Resolution Trust Corp., 49 F.3d 1263, 1267 (7th Cir. 1995) (discussing Rule 59(e)). And application of both Rules is entrusted to the sound judgment of the district court. Matter of Prince, 85 F.3d 314, 324 (7th Cir. 1996); Lee, 936 F.2d at 979.

Brost points to no new facts, change in law, or manifest error of law. In a convoluted set of pleadings, Brost vigorously asserts that the door to the federal courthouse should always remain open to hear the type of claim he is raising. Congress, however, has determined otherwise, and imposed time limitations on § 2254 claims. As explained in the Court's May 18, 2001 opinion, Brost did not comply with those limits.

His habeas petition was properly dismissed as untimely, and he offers no evidence of cause and prejudice or a fundamental miscarriage of justice that would allow the court to hear the merits of his claims. See Brooks v. Walls, -- F.3d --, No. 01-1584, 2002 U.S. App. Lexis 1556 (7th Cir. Feb. 1, 2002) (analyzing the timeliness of a § 2254 petition when the Illinois Courts have found the post-conviction petition untimely).

Turning to Brost's request for a certificate of appealability, the court must either issue the certificate or state why the certificate should not issue. Fed. R. App. P. 22(b). "A certificate of appealability may issue . . . only if the applicant has made a substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right." 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(2). The Supreme Court has recently re-iterated how an applicant meets this burden. See Slack v. McDaniel, 120 S.Ct. 1595, 1604 (2000). When a habeas application has been denied on its merits, the applicant "must demonstrate that reasonable jurists would find the district court's assessment of the constitutional claims debatable or wrong." Id. If the application was denied on procedural grounds, the applicant must cross two hurdles, one of which is directed to the district court's procedural holding, and the other directed to the underlying constitutional claims. See id. Thus, the applicant must demonstrate "that jurists of reason would find it debatable whether the district court was correct in its procedural ruling." Id. And, the applicant must show, "at least, that jurists of reason would find it debatable whether the [habeas] petition states a valid claim of the denial of a constitutional right. . . ." Id.

Here, Brost cannot make the requisite showing. First, his petition was denied as untimely, and he fails to demonstrate that reasonable jurists could [verb omitted] the timing issue. [sic.] See e.g. Brooks, 2002 U.S. App. Lexis 1556 (re-affirming that a state court's decision on the timeliness of a post-conviction petition is binding on a federal court, and that an untimely filed post-conviction petition does not toll the limitations period for filing a § 2254 petition). And, Brost offers nothing to demonstrate the merits of his claims. As noted in the court's May 18, 2001 opinion, the Apprendi issue is not a basis for relief. (R. 5, pp. 4-5.) Brost's other claims are an unwieldy farrago of assertions that are supported by neither facts nor law. Reasonable jurists cannot debate the lack of demonstrated merit to Brost's claims.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS,
Plaintiff-Appellee,

v.

CHESTER BROST,
Defendant-Appellant.

APPEAL FROM THE
CIRCUIT COURT OF
COOK COUNTY.

No. 93 CR 12680

HONORABLE
THOMAS A. HETT,
JUDGE PRESIDING.

ORDER

A jury found defendant Charles Brost guilty of three counts of aggravated criminal sexual assault, kidnapping, and robbery. The trial judge sentenced him to a term of 30 years for each of the three counts of aggravated criminal sexual assault and 15 years for aggravated kidnapping, these sentences to run consecutive to each other, and seven years for robbery with that sentence to be concurrent with the others. Defendant's sole contention on appeal is that he did not effectively waive his right to be present during his post-trial motion for a new trial and the aggravation and mitigation portion of his [p. 2] sentencing hearing.

Defendant contends that there is nothing in the record to indicate that defendant's waiver of his right to be present took place in open court. We do not agree, and we affirm his convictions. Because of the nature of the issue before us, it is unnecessary to set forth the facts of the crimes involved.

A criminal defendant has the constitutional right to be present in the courtroom at every stage of his trial, but where defendant voluntarily absents himself and chooses not to be present for proceedings he has waived his right to appeal. People v. Owens, 102 Ill.2d 145, 464 N.E.2d 252 (1984).

Following all the evidence and arguments, defendant chose not to be present when the verdict was returned. Before bringing the jury into court, the judge and defendant engaged in the following colloquy:

"Q. Your attorney indicates you do not wish to be present when the jury comes out and reaches its verdict?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have you have [sic] a right to be present, and in fact unless you voluntarily give up that right, you have to be here. Do you understand that?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you want to do?

[p. 3] A. Waive my right."

The jury then returned its verdicts. Defendant also chose not to be present at a pretrial motion to suppress identification. Defendant does not challenge the fact that he voluntarily waived being present at either of these two portions of the proceedings.

After trial, defendant presented a motion for new trial, which was denied, and a sentencing hearing was held. Defendant was not present for either of these hearings. Prior to these proceedings, the trial judge made the following statement in the presence of defense counsel:

"For purposes of the record, Mr. Court Reporter, when we didn't notice your absence earlier about 1:30, Mr. Chester Brost, the > defendant in this case, came out into open court and indicated that he did not wish to be present during the hearing on his motion for a new trial. Nor did he want to be present during any portion of the hearing in aggravation.

> I questioned him and I am convinced that he is [sic] knowingly and intelligently waived his right to be present and that is a personal waiver on his part."

After the post-trial motion and the evidentiary part of the aggravation and mitigation hearing, defendant was present in open [p. 4] court. The judge then made the following statement: "At your request, you were not required to be present during the motion for new trial. That motion was denied. You were not required at your request, to be present at the evidentiary portion of the hearing in aggravation and mitigation." Neither defense counsel nor defendant objected to or challenged that statement by the judge. The trial judge then offered defendant an opportunity to speak, but defendant chose not to do so. Thereafter, the sentences were imposed.

We hold that defendant voluntarily waived his right to be present during the hearing on his motion for a new trial and during a portion of the hearing in aggravation and mitigation. That waiver is supported by evidence in the record. The trial judge made the initial statement that defendant had voluntarily and intelligently waived his right to be present. Again before sentencing, in the presence of defense counsel and defendant, the judge again stated that it was at defendant's request that he was not present at those portions of the proceedings. No one challenged that assertion. It seems clear that defendant's right to be present was not presumed, but was a fact.

Accordingly, the judgment of the circuit court of Cook County is affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

ORDER

This matter comes before the court on defendant's post-conviction petition pursuant to 725 ILCS 5/122-1 et seq. The defendant was tried by jury and ultimately found guilty of multiple counts of Aggravated Criminal Sexual Assault, Aggravated Kidnapping and Robbery. The court sentenced defendant to a total of 105 years in the Illinois Department of Corrections for his particularly heinous crimes.

Initially, the court must determine whether the petition was timely filed. The post-conviction statute provides in pertinent part:

> "...No proceedings under this Article shall be commenced more than 6 months after the denial of a petition for leave to appeal or the date for filing such a petition if none is filed or issuance of the opinion from the Illinois Supreme Court or 6 months after the date of the order denying certiorari by the United States Supreme Court or the date for filing such a petition if not is filed or 3 years from the date of conviction, whichever is sooner, unless the defendant alleges facts showing that the delay was not due to his culpable negligence."

Defendant's petition for leave to appeal was denied by the Illinois Supreme Court on June 5, 1996. Consequently, pursuant to statute, no post-conviction proceedings could be commenced after December 5, 1996. The defendant filed his petition on February 20, 1997. Unless the petitioner has alleged facts showing that the delay in filing was not due to his culpable negligence, the petition is statutorily barred and must be dismissed.

While the defendant has not alleged facts showing that the delay in filing was not due to his culpable negligence within the body of his post-conviction petition, he has attached an exhibit entitled "Motion to Toll Post-Conviction Limitation Statute and for Appointment of Counsel." Petition, Exhibit I. The document is not file marked by the Circuit Clerk of Cook County. Nevertheless, according to court records, the motion was submitted on December 26, 1996 and denied by the trial court on January 8, 1997, as it is not cognizable under the Post-conviction Act. In his motion, the defendant alleges that he was not able to meet the deadline for filing his post-conviction (December 5, 1996 -- [p. 2] 6 months after his petition for leave to appeal was denied by the Illinois Supreme Court) because the prison facility is on indefinite lock-down status. Consequently, the defendant alleges in his motion that he has been "...locked within a cell for up to 24 hours a day and the full exercise of many of his rights have been encroached." Petition, Exhibit I, p. 2, paragraph 7. He goes on to allege that only a limited number of inmates are allowed to go to the law library each day for a limited amount of time, and that the inmates must take turns. He alleges that due to the lock-down he has not been able to obtain assistance from a law clerk or attorney. He alleges that due to the limited time to investigate and conduct research, he was not able to meet the statutory deadline for filing his post-conviction petition.

Although the court has already denied defendant's Motion to Toll the Post-Conviction Limitation Period for reasons stated above, it will consider the facts alleged therein as an attempt by petitioner to show that the delay in filing was not due to his culpable negligence as required by statute.

The court has contacted the Illinois Department of Corrections and has received the attached reply. [not included herein] The Department does provide for inmates' access to services and materials, even during periods of lock-down, and legal requests by inmates are prioritized by court deadlines. This refutes the facts alleged by petitioner in his attempt to show that the delay in filing was not due to his culpable negligence and his petition is hereby dismissed pursuant to statute.

CHESTER BROST,
Defendant-Appellant.

Appeal from the
Circuit Court of
Cook County.

No. 93 CR 12680

Honorable
Thomas A. Hett,
Judge Presiding

ORDER

Following a jury trial, defendant Chester Brost was convicted of robbery, aggravated kidnapping and three counts of aggravated criminal sexual assault. He was sentenced to a seven-year prison term for robbery to run concurrently with consecutive sentences of 15 years for aggravated kidnapping and 30 years for each count of aggravated criminal sexual assault. His convictions and sentences were affirmed on direct appeal. People v. Brost, No. 1-95-0576 (1966) (unpublished order under Supreme Court Rule 23). His petition for leave to appeal to the Illinois Supreme Court was denied on June 5, 1996. Defendant then filed a motion to toll the statute of limitations for filing a post-conviction petition, which the trial court denied on January 8, 1997. Subsequently, defendant filed a pro se post-conviction petition, which the trial court dismissed as untimely. He now [p. 2] appeals from the dismissal of that petition.

On February 20, 1997, defendant filed a pro se post-conviction petition alleging ineffective assistance of counsel and other constitutional violations. In dismissing defendant's petition, the trial court considered his motion to toll the statute of limitations, attached as an exhibit to the petition, as an attempt to show that his delay in filing was not due to his culpable negligence. The motion alleged that, due to prison lockdowns, he was confined to his cell 24 hours a day. The prison only allowed 11 inmates a day access to the law library, while the rest were put on a waiting list. Defendant further alleged that the para-legals and law clerks were unable to provide adequate assistance, and without appointment of counsel he would be unable to adequately present his contentions of constitutional violations. After defendant's petition was dismissed, he filed a motion to reconsider, alleging that the Stateville Correctional Center was on lockdown from April 16, 1996 to October 23, 1996, during which time inmates did not have access to the law library. After October 23, defendant was allowed to go to the library once a month for a 45-minute period.

The Post-Conviction Hearing Act (725 ILCS 5/122-1 et seq. (West 1996)) provides:

> "No proceedings under this Article shall be commenced more than 6 months after the denial of a petition for leave to appeal * * * or 3 years from the date of [p. 3] conviction, whichever is sooner, unless the petitioner alleges facts showing that the delay was not due to his or her culpable negligence." 725 ILCS 5/122-1(c) (West 1996).

Here, defendant's petition for leave to appeal to the Illinois Supreme Court was denied on June 5, 1996, allowing defendant until December 5, 1996, to file his petition for post-conviction relief.

Defendant contends on appeal that the trial court improperly conducted an ex parte investigation, relying on a letter from the Department of regulations and policy regarding inmates' access to the library during lockdown periods. We review de novo the sufficiency of the allegations in a post-conviction petition dismissed without an evidentiary hearing. People v. Coleman, 183 Ill.2d 366, 388-89 (1998). Therefore, we give no deference to the trial court's determination, but rely solely on the allegations contained in defendant's post-conviction petition.

Freedom from culpable negligence is difficult to establish and is also subject to de novo review. People v. Perry, 293 Ill. App. 3d 113, 115 (1997) "[I]n order to withstand dismissal at the first stage of post-conviction proceedings, a petition for post-conviction relief need only contain a simple statement which presents the gist of a claim for relief which is meritorious when considered in view of the record of the trial court proceedings." [p. 4] People v. Dredge, 148 Ill. App. 3d 911, 913 (1986). A pro se defendant need not construct legal arguments, but must allege sufficient facts in his post-conviction petition from which the trial court could find a valid claim of deprivation of a constitutional right. People v. Lemons, 242 Ill. App. 3d 941, 947 (1993). All well-pleaded facts in a petition are taken as true. People v. Coleman, 183 Ill. 2d 366, 381 (1998).

In Perry, the defendant alleged that prison lockdowns restricted his access to the law library and delayed his timely filing. The court found that the record showed periods of time in which the prison was not in lockdown, thus refuting defendant's contention that he had no access to the law library. Perry, 293 Ill. App. 3d at 117. Similarly, in this case defendant filed his post-conviction petition more than two months after the December 5, 1996, deadline. In the affidavit attached to his motion to toll the statute of limitations, defendant admitted that despite the lockdown, he was allowed out of his cell if called for library privileges, visits, showers, and yard time. He stated in his motion to reconsider the denial of his post-conviction petition that the lockdown ended on October 23, 1996, more than one month before his petition was due. Although defendant also alleges in his brief on appeal that his trial transcripts were lost from June 15, 1996, until November 1, 1996, he still had more than a month to prepare his petition. Under these circumstances, defendant failed to demonstrate that his [p. 5] untimely filing was excused.

Accordingly, the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

Affirmed.
